In 1992, renowned Japanese furnishing outfit, Yamagiwa, was licensed by the Frank Lloyd Wright Foundation to revive Wright-designed and Wright-inspired lighting fixtures. Two years after that, the corporation launched the Taliesin series along with four other lighting series that immortalises the creative brilliance Frank Lloyd Wright - one of the most prominent American architect of the 20th century. 23 years on since their release, the products and their timeless design are still adored very much by connoisseurs all over the world.

Available in Cherry wood, Walnut or black-painted finishing, the Taliesin Series and Robie bracket serve as an elegant addition to any interior. At the same time, the refined craftsmanship of its woodwork allows consumers to truly appreciate the modern, natural allure of its material. Simple yet structural, these lighting series typically adopt a rectilinear shape, which captures a hint of architecture in its creation that blurs the lines between interior and the exterior.
